Base Ecclesial Communities: A Study of Reevangelization and Growth in the Brazilian Catholic Church

A. William Cook, Jr.

Possibly the most exciting item of missiological news to come out of Latin America these days cannot be found in the journals of most Protestant mission organizations. It has to do with the comunidades eclesiais de base or Base Ecclesial Communities, the fastest-growing movement within the Roman Catholic Church. Time magazine (May 7, 1979, p. 88) called it the most influential Catholic movement in Latin America, where there may be as many as 150,000 comunidades—80,000 of them in Brazil. A prominent sociologist, in a Smithsonian Institution symposium, states that these “grass-roots congregations” promise to change the face of Brazilian Catholicism into the nation’s first truly working-class association. He goes on to liken this phenomenon to eighteenth-century Wesleyanism (IDOC 1978:78-84).

What is the nature of this movement? What are its social and historical roots and its fundamental characteristics? And what is its significance for both Catholic and Protestant mission today? I have approached these issues with several concerns: (1) as a Christian who is deeply concerned about total human liberation; (2) as a Protestant who has been engaged in mission in Latin America for over a quarter century; (3) as an evangelical missiologist who is committed to holistic evangelization and church growth; and (4) as an inquisitive student of social and religious phenomena.

1. Definition

The Base Ecclesial Communities constitute a dynamic movement that defies easy definition. The 1968 Medellín Episcopal Conference of Latin America (CELAM II) called them “the first and fundamental ecclesiastical nucleus . . . the initial cell of the ecclesiastical structures and the focus of evangelization . . . the most important source of human advancement and development” (CELAM II:201). The 1979 Puebla Conference (CELAM III) called the comunidades “an expression of the church’s preferential love for the poor . . . the focal point of evangelization, the motor of liberation.”

CELAM III defined “community” as “intimate personal relationship in the faith.” “Ecclesial” suggests the church-relatedness of these communities through the celebration of the Word and of the sacraments. But, above all, it is the church “putting into practice the Word of God” and making “present and active the church’s mission.” Finally, the comunidades are “of the base” because they are germinal cells in the wider parish community.

What sets the Brazilian Base Ecclesial Communities apart from other superficially similar movements are their origins. They have not been imported from abroad. Nor are they communities that have been created by ecclesiastical fiat as part of some predetermined strategy for church renewal and reevangelization. They are grassroots communities, spontaneously in response to the Latin American reality, and of which the church was virtually forced to take cognizance.

The church gradually became aware of the existence of “natural communities (neighborhood associations, youth clubs, workers’ cells, etc.) . . . local and environmental, which correspond to the reality of a homogeneous group and whose size allows for personal fraternal contact amongst its members.” Having discovered these “homogeneous units,” the church determined to orient its pastoral efforts “toward the transformation of these communities into a family of God.” “It tried to do this by making itself present amongst them ‘as leaven’ by means of a small nucleus. The comunidad ‘creates a community of faith, hope and charity which takes seriously and at the same time challenges the ‘homogeneous units’ which are at the base of society’” (CELAM II: 201).

William Cook is the Associate Director of the Latin American Evangelical Center for Pastoral Studies (CELEP) with headquarters in San José, Costa Rica. A member of the Latin America Mission, he served during fifteen years as a coordinator in Evangelism-in-Depth in Spanish America and Brazil. He is presently writing his dissertation on the comunidades de base in Brazil for the Doctor of Missiology degree from Fuller Theological Seminary.
2. Sociohistorical Roots of the Base Communities

The transition from a traditional and semipagan institution that for almost 500 years had been allied with the rich and powerful to a church that is beginning to return to the poor did not happen as the result of a sudden change of heart. The social and political and religious determinants from the time of the discovery of Brazil by the Portuguese until the mid-nineteenth century were the royal patronage system, which controlled the church, and the fazenda, or system of large plantations with slaves and, after 1888, indentured labor.

Governmental changes from royal colony (1500) to independent empire (1822) and republic (1889) did not alter these facts. Fazendeiro and plantation chaplain, African slaves and mulatto and mestizo “free men” were all part of an overarching patron-dependent relationship to which the church, with only a few exceptions, gave its blessing. This relationship did not change when feudalism was supplanted by industrialism, setting in motion the vast peasant migrations to the cities and the rise of the festering fazelas (Freyre 1964:30f., 390f.; 1968:26,95; De Kadt 1970:10-50).

The ecclesiastical fact of life during the first 489 years of Brazilian history was “regalism”—the control of the church by the crown: the direct result of the royal patronage granted the Iberian monarchs by the pope. When Rome regained control of the Brazilian church with the proclamation of the republic, it inherited a weakened and venal institution that had all but lost the allegiance of the masses. While the church basked in the reflected glory of the crown, it evidenced small awareness and concern over this fact. Forced to stand upon its own feet, the church discovered the virtual nonexistence of its own bases (De Kadt 1970:53f.; Bruneau 1974:11-29). During this period several Protestant denominations began to appear on the Brazilian scene.

The indigenous population and the African peoples who were transferred wholesale into Brazilian slavery were superficially “Christianized.” They were allowed by their masters to practice their animistic rites in secret because this “facilitated the civilizing process and aided in the disciplining of the slaves” (Freyre 1964:328). Afro-Brazilian Spiritism—and recent Pentecostal growth—can be explained in part as a reaction of the masses against the social, economic, cultural, and religious exploitation by the feudal fazenda and ecclesiastical systems.

During the first half of this century the church attempted to recoup its losses through an alliance of convenience with an anti-clerical populist dictatorship. The political ferment and growing popular discontent during the presidencies that followed gradually forced the church into contact with the exploited masses, and numerous radical Catholic movements came into being. Two of the most important for our study were Catholic Action (AC) and the Movimento de Educação de Base (MEB).4 The MEB was born from the church’s increasing awareness of the plight of the peasants and out of its unease over Marxist successes. The basic techniques used by the MEB—Paulo Freire’s conscientização (consciousness raising) and nondirective group dynamics—have been refined in comunidad de base methodology (Bruneau 1974:30-104; De Kadt 1970:34-105; LADOC: vol. 2, April 1972, and vol 6, Sept.–Oct. 1975).

The violent reaction of the landholder-industrialist-military alliance to the threat of a radicalized Catholicism culminated in the military revolução of 1964, and in the eventual demise of the MEB as a prophetic movement. However, the prophetic voices and actions of the progressive priests and bishops who supported this movement led to an escalating confrontation between church and state. Events have placed the Brazilian hierarchy in the forefront of the struggle for reevangelization and human rights in Brazil and Latin America (Bruneau 1974:127-65; De Kadt 1970:177-211).

Official Catholic documents and pronouncements after Vatican Council II gave the Brazilian progressives in the hierarchy the doctrinal underpinning for their actions. Gradually, for the sake of institutional solidarity, an increasing number of bishops have been forced to define their position vis-à-vis the revolução’s doctrine of national security. This doctrine subsumes, at whatever human cost, personal and collective civil rights to the security and economic well-being of the state (LADOC Keyhole Series, no. 8: 1-5; Pro Mundi Vida: Dossier 1977; IDOC: 14–29; 43–45).

The “Brazilian economic miracle” has, by the government’s own statistics (1978), resulted only in widening the gap between the rich and the poor. As they struggled to help the poor of Brazil to understand the meaning of the Catholic faith, the clergy were confronted with two aspects of the same Reality: (a) socioeconomic injustice and (b) Christopagan popular religiosity. This twin reality has shaped the church’s approach to base community praxis.

3. Fundamental Orientations of the Base Ecclesial Communities

The significance of the communauté de base for Christian missiology can be found in the following four orientations, which set the communauté apart from both traditional Catholicism and other Basic Christian Communities in Latin America.

a. A New Understanding of Reality

Reality with a capital R is the operative word in the Brazilian comunidades. The ingredients of this Reality are the context of poverty, injustice, and marginalization in which the majority of Brazilians find themselves. Communidade members have begun to discover that this Reality is not a divine “given.” They are seeking to understand this Reality not so they can accommodate themselves to it, but in order to be able to change it as part of their Christian responsibility. Both Scripture and a critical socioeconomic analysis—which draws from several sources, including the writings of Brazilian theologians Leonardo Boff and Carlos Mesters—serve as tools for the unmasking of this Reality.4 Reality is also the nominality of the masses, which must be reevangelized with the message of salvation through Jesus Christ.

b. A New Model of the Church

The comunidades eclesiais de base have arisen more or less spontaneously in response to Brazilian Reality. The interpretation of the ecclesial Reality of the comunidades will vary depending upon whether it is being seen from the vantage point of the hierarchy or from the perspective of the comunidade leaders. On the part of the latter, the church is the People of God, composed of all those who have been baptized. It has been called to be a servant community. But the church all too often has been unfaithful to this commission. According to Father José Marins, Latin American coordinator of the movement, the Base Ecclesial Communities are a faithful pilgrim remnant—what Dom Helder Câmara has called “Abrahamic minorities” (Câmara 1976:78)—within the larger nominal church and in the structures and institutions of society. This koinonia admits of no anonymous Christianity (despite the movement’s theological indebtedness to some points to Karl Rahner).

Sin and salvation, while affecting the individual person, are understood in the comunidades more in corporate and structural terms. Conversion is a process. The community of faith is constantly “being converted” to God in Christ through the church, to the Word and through the neighbor. These are the instruments that God uses to confront us with Reality.

The comunidades leaders see their movement as a reordering from the bottom up of the millennial structures of the church. The church is no longer seen as a pyramid with the pope at the top, but as a circle in which every member, including the hierarchy and the humblest Christian, has a ministry which has been given to him or her by the Holy Spirit. In contrast, other Catholic observers tend to see the movement as one of several expressions of the one church, including the traditional territorial church, the Charismatic Renewal, the Neocatechumenate, marriage encounter, and others.

Reality is also liturgical, because it is in the Eucharist that the Christological and ecclesial center of the gospel becomes most evident to members of the comunidades. During the “celebration” of every aspect of the austere liturgy focuses upon the significance of our Lord’s passion for the Reality which the comunidades members experience daily. It is a call to marturia, because more than fifty comunidad leaders have already been murdered or have disappeared in Latin America. Others have been harassed, imprisoned, and tortured.

c. A New Way of Doing Theology

The Base Community understanding of social and ecclesial Reality is the starting point for a new “hermeneutic of the people,” or a “theology of the base.” The point of departure of this theology is not a corpus of abstract dogma but the Reality of poverty, marginalization, injustice, and alienation which surrounds them. It is “the view from the base”—Scripture reread in community from the bottom up. Biblical themes, which have traditionally been interpreted from the optic of the rich and powerful, are now seen through the eyes of the poor and oppressed. Theology, then, becomes “a reflection upon praxis” by the oppressed leading to concrete actions toward their own liberation.

It is a contextualized theology, in the sense that the Base Communities are theologizing in their own context of poverty and oppression. Contextualization in this case does not mean functional accommodation to the dominant culture. This is a dysfunctional and prophetic contextualization, which challenges dehumanizing cultural norms. The “prophetic discontinuity” of this theology can be seen in the Bible study materials that have grown out of Base Community reflection (cf. Mesters 1973; Gorgulho 1975; Marins 1978).

d. A New Understanding of Mission

The comunidades de base reflection upon their own social and ecclesial Reality in the light of biblical Reality has led to a new understanding of the church’s mission. The proclamation of the gospel—in word and action—is both the announcement of salvation and liberation in Jesus Christ and the denunciation of everything that oppresses and alienates humanity (cf. Marins 1976b, 1977c, 1977b; Barreiro 1977). It is both reevangelization of the masses of nominal Christians and prophetic confrontation with the oppressive “powers.” In the words of a Brazilian bishop, “the comunidades are the theology of liberation put into practice” (Time, May 7, 1979, p. 88).

4. Questions and Observations from an Evangelical Protestant Perspective

It is a temptation for the evangelical Protestant to want to impose his or her own understanding of Reality (social, ecclesial, and biblical) upon the Catholic Base Ecclesial Communities. This is a temptation we must avoid if we truly believe in the incarnation of the gospel into different Realities. Neither can we evaluate the Base Communities according to our understanding of traditional Roman Catholic Reality. The comunidades de base cannot be fully appreciated or objectively critiqued from our own comfortable ivory towers. Incarnation into Base Community Reality will give us both the experience and the right to make critical observations. Nonetheless, I would suggest four questions that should be asked of the Base Communities by any student of the movement.

- a. Is the comunidades de base understanding of Reality complete? Does it deal as adequately with personal sin as it does with institutional sin? Does it give as much weight to sin as transgression against God as it does to sin against neighbor? In what way does the “lostness” of humanity before God relate on one’s intra- and inter-personal alienation?

- b. Do the base communities deal adequately with popular religiosity? Granting the need to rediscover and to preserve the liberating cultural and social values of “a religion of the people,” is there not also a need for prophetic denunciation (and exorcism) of the demonic elements in Spiritism and in popular religion?

- c. What is the ultimate source of authority for the comunidades de base? Is it the church, socioeconomic Reality, or Scripture? In what way do these sources relate to the authority of the Trinity?

- d. Does the Catholic comunidades concept of conversion-as-a-process exhaust the biblical understanding of conversion? Protestants can indeed be grateful for this counterbalancing of their own emphasis upon conversion-as-a-point-in-time-event. But at what point in the process does conversion-as-an-about-face—as metanoia, as turning “to God from idols . . . from darkness to light and from the power of Satan to God”—take place?

5. Implications for Protestant Mission

The Catholic comunidades de base have profound implications for Protestant mission in Brazil and Spanish America. Virtually all Protestant churches now working in Brazil can trace their roots to Base Ecclesial Communities. The Scottish Covenanters had their outlawed conventicles and the Anabaptists had their persecuted communities. British congregationalism was a grassroots community movement, as were the Methodist “classes”—and the Moravian communities and Society of Friends groups, which work elsewhere in Latin America. The colegia pietatis or ecclesia in ecclesia of Francke and Spener have their descendants in some of the Lutheran movements in Brazil. Indigenous Pentecostalism, which accounts for more than two-thirds of Brazilian Protestantism, began as a base church movement.

Yet most Protestant churches today are afraid of the very base church movements that gave them birth. Some churches appear to be more concerned about attaining and maintaining a dubious respectability, even in the face of institutionalized injustice and violence, than in speaking out in defense of fundamental human freedoms. Religious “liberty”—“freedom to preach the Gospel”—takes precedence over other freedoms. Said Father José Marins, after he had been shown the large “cathedral” being built by a Pentecostal pastor, “We are coming from where you are going.” Latin American Protestants are being challenged to consider the possibility that the evangelization of Catholic Latin America may take place, at least in part, within the Catholic Church, and to search for ways in which Protestants can relate to this phenomenon.
6. Conclusion

Nevertheless, the comunidades de base present their greatest challenge to their own church. They challenge it, as we have seen, at the levels of sociology, ecclesiology, theology, and mission. How will a church, which is one of the wealthiest, most centralized, and traditional institutions on earth, respond to this challenge from a church of the poor?

The final document of Puebla, despite its ambivalence at several points, accepts this challenge to its “personal and institutional behavior.” Quoting from Paul VI, CELAM III defined evangelization in terms of the totality of human needs: “Evangelization will not be complete until there takes place dialogue...between the gospel and the personal and social lives of people in the concrete.” Evangelization “must keep the whole man and all men before its eyes and must communicate to them suitably and adequately a particular vigorous message in our time on liberation...always in the context of the global plan of salvation” (Evangelii Nuntiandi 29, 38).

The foundational pillars of this evangelization, according to John Paul II, are “the truth about Jesus Christ...about the church...about man.” If these foundations are taken seriously by the hierarchy and the comunidades de base leadership, the movement will continue to grow and to fulfill its promise as “a hope [and possibly the hope] of the church” (Evangelii Nuntiandi 58).

Notes

1. I am using the Portuguese spelling throughout; Spanish: comunidades eclesiásticas de base.
2. Quotations are from a rough translation of the final Puebla document done by some of the journalists who were present.
3. Dom Hélder Câmara and several of his “radical” and progressive colleagues were early militants in the ranks of the AC.
4. Marxist analysis has contributed less to Brazilian comunidade de base reflection than in some Spanish American countries.

Selected Bibliography of Base Ecclesial Reality around the World

Alicino, Rogério
Ameche, Plenary of 1976
Andres Vela, Jesús
Anonymous (Paraguay)
1975 “Are ‘Basic Communities’ Marxist?” LADOC 61, November–December; 16–18.
Argenti, Cyrille
Barreiro, Alvaro, S.J.
Berryman, Felipe
1971 “Popular Catholicism in Latin America,” in Cross Currents (Summer).
Berten, I. G.
Bolger, James F.
Bruneau, Thomas C.
Câmara, Dom Helder
CELM II
CELM III
Clark, Stephen B.
Clark, David
1977 Basic Communities: Towards an Alternative Society. London: SPCK.
Clemens, William and Harvey Hester
Concelho Episcopal Latinoamericano (CELAM)
1977 Special bulletin on Base Ecclesial Communities. No. 122, November–December.
Concelho Nacional dos Bispos do Brasil (CNBB)
Concilium
1975 Editions dedicated to Base Ecclesial Communities. English, no. 4; Spanish, no. 104 (April). Articles by Comblin, Dussel, Floristán, Garayda, Marins, and others.
De Kadt, Emanuel
Dialogo Ecumenico
1977 Special on Base Ecclesial Communities, no. 43.
Freyre, Gilberto
Gorgulho, Frei Gilberto, and Anderson, Sr. Ana Flora
Gregory, Alfonso, et al.
Gresh, T., ed.
1978 Readings on Basic Christian Communities in the Church.
1978 The Wineskins for a New Church in ferment.
Growing Up Towards a New Community
Harriott, John F. X.
1978 Basic Communities in Asia, in The Month (March): 81–85.
Hoornstra, Eduardo, et al.
Montenegro, John

Njenga, Bishop John

Olsen, Charles M.
1973 The Base Church: Creating Community through Multiple Forms.
Atlanta: Forum House.

Pastoral Missionera
1974 "Comunidad cristiana de base y grupo politico" (May).
"Pluralismo eclesial y comunidad de base" (June-July).

Paul VI

Perrin-Jassy, M-F.

Peyton, Father Thomas, M.M., and McGarry, Father Michael, C. SP.

Piamonte's Episcopal Conference
1978 On Small Ecclesiastical Communities. Catholic Documentation 8-IV and 16-VII.

Pontifical Council for Laity

Pro Mundi Vita: Bulletin
1974 Basic Ecclesiastical Communities and Religious Leadership in Latin America. No. 50, pp. 70-79.
Basic Communities in the Church. No. 62 (September).

Pro Mundi Vita: Dossiers
1977 The Brazilian Church and Human Rights. No. 2 (September–October).

Ribeiro Guimaraes, Almir

Salat, M.

Scanone, Father Juan Carlos, S.J.

Sider, Ronald J.

Snyder, Howard

Time Magazine
1979 "The Church of the Poor: Latin America's comunidades de base keep growing," May 7, p. 88.

WCC Exchange
1979 Church Basic Communities in Latin America. Geneva: WCC.
NEW from ORBIS

PROPHETS DENIED HONOR
An Anthology on the Hispanic Church in the United States
ANTONIO M. STEVENS ARROYO, ed.

Selections on liturgy, catechetics, history, poetry, politics, culture . . . by Virgilio Elizondo, Piri Thomas, Patricio Flores, Cesar Chavez, Hermanas, Padres, and others. "These scores of bulletins from as many social battlefronts pulsate with the energy and outrage of denied religious aspirations, unrealized national values, menaced identities and class oppression."
—FRANK BONILLA, Professor of Sociology, CUNY

THE IMPOSSIBLE DREAM
The Spirituality of Dom Helder Camara
MARY HALL

The author worked with the renowned Archbishop in North East Brazil and has witnessed his immense pastoral care. This unsettling book poses a challenge which questions one's life and values in the light of Christ and His Gospel.

AFRICAN CHRISTIAN SPIRITUALITY
AYLWARD SHORTER

Here is a book that focuses on the heart and soul of African Christians—their deepest concern and highest aspirations. In selections of poetry and prose, the leading African writers of our time reflect on the fusion of African culture and Christian belief. Readers will find something of the genius of the African soul in its energy and vitality and also a vivid awareness of the life-giving Christian spirit.

THEOLOGY OF A CLASSLESS SOCIETY
GEEVARGHESE MAR OSTATHIOS
Metropolitan of the Orthodox Syrian Church in Kerala, South India

In a book critical of Marxism, a non-Western voice presents the Trinity as a paradigm of what community can be in today's world. "A book of importance for us in the West because it is an authentic and relevant voice of the Orthodox Church of South India, because it is a helpful contribution to discussion on the trinitarian understanding of God, and because it is a foundation of social ethics without secularism on trinitarian grounds and much more radical than our radicals."
—JURGEN MOLTMANN

PROTESTANT PIONEERS IN KOREA
EVERETT NICHOLS HUNT, JR.

The most succinct and readable book on the subject yet to appear. With Hanson's Catholic Politics in China and Korea, this book forms the first two volumes of a series on mission history and theology to be published in collaboration with the American Society of Missiology.

CATHOLIC POLITICS IN CHINA AND KOREA
ERIC O. HANSON

A brief but well-researched presentation of the always fluid relationships between the Catholic Church and political powers from the 16th century to the present. A final chapter assesses the possibilities for the future of the Church in China, Taiwan, and Korea.

At bookstores or from:

Maryknoll, NY 10545

Write for catalog.